Michael Jackson's work is often highlighted for his incredible talent and charm, but what many people don't know is that the King of Pop was a genius in the studio. His creativity in music engineering was unmatched, and he worked with some of the most talented engineers in history to produce hit after hit - in fact, he kept a diary during this time period detailing his creative process. In this blog post you can listen to a recording of him working on his 90s smash "Beat It" - it's an album track so it's not too difficult to get your head around, but what I find fascinating is how meticulously Michael worked on every aspect of production. This song has often been called his greatest moment in the studio, and listening to this multitrack you can understand why. The production of this album track is outstanding, and although Michael worked with some of the world's best producers and engineers on his records, the man himself was the most meticulous of them all - he simply wasn't satisfied unless everything was perfect. The 1991 single "Black or White" took out 3 MTV VMAs for Best Male Video, Best Dance Video and for Best Editing between 1992-1994. It also won 2 Grammys in 1992 for Best R&B Song and Best R&B Male Vocal Performance. Who will be the next record to beat these records? Michael Jackson - Beat It (Multitrack)

"This post is mainly for people who are interested in listening to his multitracks. If you don't like it then that's fine, I don't want you here, just scroll down a bit and listen to his other stuff." "I'm not going to talk about other Michael Jackson songs as I have plenty of those on my other posts. If you're looking for other stuff by him then go look at them. I don't want to be a part of your Michael Jackson obsession." "Start watching his documentary right away. If you haven't watched it then go watch it right now, or at least listen to the soundtrack on Spotify."
